

Weekly News Summary for Sunday, November 23, 2025.

In a letter sent to all members of the North Carolina General Assembly, Dare County Board of Commissioners Chairman Robert L. Woodard Sr., asked for help.

Woodard writes Dare County has always taken care of its own. Dare County and five of its oceanfront communities have invested more than $275 million in local beach nourishment projects and millions more to keep our inlets open-ensuring our fishermen can access their "highway to work."

However, today, small areas of our oceanfront in the villages of Buxton and Rodanthe have deteriorated to the point where we can no longer sustain these efforts alone. We need help-your help, says the letter.

Woodard points out three specific ways the state can make a meaningful difference:

First, Beach Nourishment Fund:

Several years ago, the General Assembly established a Beach Nourishment Fund but never allocated resources to it. Woodard asked the legislature appropriate funding to this account on an annual basis to assist coastal counties in protecting the shoreline and the state's tourism economy.

Second, Proactive Solutions for N.C. Highway 12:

NCDOT crews continue to do an outstanding job responding to sand and water overwash, working tirelessly to reopen the road as quickly as possible. However, proactive, long-term solutions are urgently needed before portions of the road become permanently impassable. The N.C. 12 Task Force with members from two counties and four additional organizations worked collaboratively over several years to develop a comprehensive plan to maintain N.C. 12 in both the short term and the long term that would ensure sustainable access to both Dare and Hyde counties. The full report can be viewed at Dare NC dot gov slash NC 12.

Lastly, Hardened Structures:

Current state policy prohibits the use of hardened structures such as groins along the coast. Nourishment alone is no longer sufficient. Dare County needs the ability to use every proven tool available to stabilize the shoreline and safeguard Dare's communities. Woodard asks the General Assembly respectfully to lift the ban on these protective measures.

Woodard writes "Dare County's leaders and citizens have always worked hard to address challenges on our own but the situation has now reached a critical point. With your support, we can preserve our coastline, protect public infrastructure, and sustain the economic engine that benefits all of North Carolina."

Coastal Resources Commissioners to look at beach stabilizing

At the Coastal Resources Commission meeting this past week, the discussion continued about threatened houses in Buxton and Rodanthe.

Stakeholders invited to the table included Dare County Manager Bobby Outten, National Parks of Eastern North Carolina Superintendent David Hallac, Buxton Civic Association Co-vice President Brian Harris, and coastal engineer Jay Overton of Albemarle & Associates. Each described escalating conditions on the ground and the limits of existing tools, reports Island Free Press.

Hallac reported a rapidly deteriorating situation on Cape Hatteras National Seashore beaches. “Today, there are 52 threatened oceanfront structures in Buxton and 48 in Rodanthe,” he said. “Over the last month, 16 wastewater systems broke open and potentially spewed raw sewage onto your National Seashore beach.”

He said NPS staff have removed “nearly 500 full-size pickup truckloads of debris” from the shoreline in six weeks, diverting personnel from core responsibilities. “The entire beach in front of the village of Buxton is closed right now because of all of these dangerous homes,” he said. “The consequences of this are massive.”

Commissioners and speakers repeatedly returned to the limitations of sandbags, the financial and physical constraints of nourishment, and the state’s statutory ban on hardened structures.

The discussion concluded with agreement that the CRC Science Panel would begin evaluating potential shoreline-stabilization options—including, but not limited to, hardened structures—and report back with an outline at the Commission’s next meeting in February.
